Elephant Hills, Thailand: Luxury Tent Next To The Rainforest

Posted on July 29, 2013 | Leave a comment

After my unforgettable encounter with the awesome Haha and other elephants return to Elephant Hills camp, where I really discover my spacious tent in details. Back tired, but full of pictures of this endless day started at dawn at Chao Lam Lake. I took these pictures before collapsing. Or almost collapsing, because after, I have to go dinner... The tent is awesome! Simply decorated and inspired by an African lodge revised Thai way. Each element recalls the elephants: stools, towel racks ... like in the picture 6. Nicewooden floors: I take off our shoes before entering the tent. And my advice is do not leave your shoes outside, if you don't want to find a colony of insect! The tent is also comfortable, with mosquito nets everywhere (pictures 2, 3 and 4). And I was able to sleep without a mosquito (or any other visible insect), a blessing! Impeccable bedding next to the fan. But the big thing is the real bathroom (picture 5)! Yes, a real one: clean, pretty and useful (even there is cold water only, it's okay for me). Since leaving Chumphon, I've dreamed it! To conclude for my first "camping" experience in Thailand (LOL), I love it! Another detail I found quite fun, the lock that serves as a key to close the tent (really old school process, lol). You should not need to make fifty back and forth to your tent in the evening, it quickly becomes bothering! Last picture: the path to the tents. ELEPHANT HILLS
